Sinking of the Steamer George Law.

—Yesterday morning at 8 o'clock, the steamer George Law left her wharf in Petersburg for Claremont, on the James river, having on board an excursion party numbering 350 colored persons. While the steamer was passing through Pedersburg, where the river is very narrow, the chambermaid discovered that the buil's-eyes of the steamer had been left open, and through these the water was tushing into the ladies' boudoir. She saw that the steamer was rapidly sinking, and at once reported the fact to the captain, who immediately endeavored to reach the who immediately endeavored to reach the chore. He was successful in getting the vessel near enough to shore to throw out his gangplank, and thus enable the passengers to land before the steamer went down, which occurred soon after those on board had gotten ashere. As soon as it became known that the steamer became known that the steamer became known that the steamer became as the steamer went down, which is the steamer went down as the steamer went or was staking, a panic occurred on board among if e excursionists, and the captain had to threaten to use force in order to preserve order and save-life. Some of the women were so excited that they screamed loudly for help, while the cooler ones were engaged putting on life preservers. In addition to the excursion party there was a heavy cargo of miscellaneous freight, nearly all of which is either lost or ruined. The George Law was built in New York in 1852, and was valued at $10,000. She was owned by George W. Baner, of Washington, D. C. An effort will be made to raise the sunken steamer at once. The excursionists were taken to Petersburg yesterday afternoon on barges in tow of a tugboat. The Law formerly ran between Baltimore and points on the Chester river route, and was also used as an excursion boat. She came on the Po-tomac two or three years ago, and was at first placed on the ferry between this city

SURPRISED BY HIS BETTER-HALF .- The inhabitants of "Petersburg," in the northern portion of the civy, had their slumbers dis-turbed about three o'clock this morning by the bellicose conduct of an irate colored woman whose husband has of late been dividing his affection between her and another sable female. At the bour named the neg-lected wife made her way to the residence of her liege lord's inamorats and found them snoring away, the early morning hours in each others' embrace. The enraged wife had carried a pistol with her, and after awakening the guilty pair threatened to visit dire vengeance on their heads. The husband did not stand on the order of going, but vacated the premises instanter—and that, too, minus some portions of his wardrobe—passing out the back door and over the fence, thus eluding the Nemesis whose wrath he had provoked and who swore she would shoot him on sight. After chasing her recreant better-half a short distance and finding she could not overtake him, the irate female proceeded to pay her respects of her liege lord's inamorata and found irate female proceeded to pay her respects to the woman who had alienated her husband's affections from her, which she did in language far from polite.
